another letter which it will be a warnin' to all young women never to commit the mistake which I did most innocent on Saturday gone a week at a big draggoods store in New York. I had heerd considerable about this 'ere store. but I warn't in no way prepared for all I see there. Sakes! It was equal to a dozen villages like Vandusenburg a coming out o' meetio' all at once. Such a crowd I never see, and the women maulin' of the goods without buy-in', and the clerks lookin' on sarcastic just like you see in any ornery store. Well, I went about better'n an hour gettin' a couple o' pair of good domestic hose for my son Jabez, and seven-eighths of a yard of stuff for cheese bags; and sudden, bein' uncommon tired, I felt a weak spell comin' on, and I hadn't hardly strength to ask for chintz for the setting room

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 21.

Taking an Elewator.

Your perfect gentlemanly way of putting my letter in your paper last winter, writ as a warning to all bad boys on ice, inclines me to send

Mr. Editor of Hearth and Home:

"Next story ma'am," says the clerk, kind o' looking sharp at me, "wouldn't you like to take a elewator?" Well, I was beat! It seemed a most un common proceeding, and what I never heerd no gentleman do before, to ask me to take an elewator. I had my misgivings what it meant, for our Jabez with his jokes and what nots, though his father and me is most strong temprince folks, persists sometimes in takin' what he calls elewators, which is glasses of sperits and water, calkerlated, as he says, to raise droopin' feelins and failin' strength.

"Sir," says I, as lofty es I could, "I prefer not, and to my mind you'd do better for a respectable shop not to be offerin' elewators, leastwise not to me." So I kept walkin' round, not likin' to ask questions showin' my country ways, and still feelin' that awful feelin' of goneness which them as has weak spells is subject to, when another clerk, hearin' me ask for chintzes, said something again about my taking a elewator. By this time I felt dreadful, and so, says I, makin' up my mind it was a York fashion, and it warn't best to seem too back country, "Thanks to you, sir," says 1, "I don't mind tryin' something of the kind, bein' most remarkable thirsty.'

"Certainly, ma'am," says he, a bowing care-less toward a stand holdin' a fancy pail with a spigot to it, full of what I might have took to be water, judgin' by the taste, but I know well enough it was some deceitful genteel kind of liquor with the taste and smell taken out, like they do to benzine and castor oil. No sooner had I swallered a goblet of it when the young man pinted to a little room which, if you'll believe me, Mr. Editor, give the queerest kind of jerk you ever see just as I looked in, and seein' comfortable sofas all around the walls of it, I stepped in. There was other ladies goin' in too, so we all set down, and I couldn't help wondering whether the poor things had been takin' elewators like me. won't do no harm," says I to myself, "to sit here a minute or two till this weak spell passes off," when, massy on me! if I didn't feel my-self AGOIN' UP! Yes, agoin' up, and with me the room and sofas and ladies and all! I clutched a hold of the cushion and stared kind o' wild like as not, for one of the ladies bit her lip as if contemplating to laugh, and still we scold him for using that wulgar expression .-But I couldn't help feelin' scared, particular when I see, all of a suddent men and women kind o' walkin' about in the air. Once I jumped up to go out of the room, but a man workin' some clock works in the corner held out his hand. "In one moment, madam!" said he, a pushin' me back with such an air! "Did you take a elewator "I whispered to the lady setting alongside of me. She nodded her was all agoin' up, leastwise so it seemed. "It's all on account o' taking that elewator," thinks

I to myself, and then it come upon me how uncommon appropriate the word was, meanin' a drink, though often I had heard Jabez's pa head without saying nothing, and from her queer look I reckoned she was worst affected even than I was. "It's the first one I ever took in my life here in York," continues I; "our country elewators is more positive to take, but they don't have nothing like the effect, though I must say such things never ough'er to be took except in sickness.' "Now, madam," says the clock man very pompous, "you won't have no difficulty now. Sure enough I didn't have no difficulty. For a minit the effect of the elewator passed off and dener than it came. I followed the ladies out lively enough, but sakes alives! what a time I had finedin' the street door! I never was so both-ored in all my life, though I knowed all along what was the matter, but just kept on without asking no questions of nobody, and finally agoin down stairs, and down stairs, and expectin nothing else but to find myself in the kitchen, if Mr. Stewart's family lives anywhere in the buildin', which is most likely, their being' enough roomI should think. Well, to make a long story short, how I ever got out of that store I don't ever expect to know, but after I once ketched sight of them glass doors I didn't turned neck nor heel till I stood out on the sidewalk explainin' private to a police that I'd been takin' a elewator, and wouldn't he put me in a down town stage. To this day I haven't said a word about the business to Jabez, nor husband, nor no one to home. Somethings had best be bygones. But I feel it a bounden duty, Mr. Editor, to warn all respectable females, great and small. not to be led into takin' elewators when they go into them York stores, least of all this new fangled kind which is equal fatal in consequences to pure sperits, and tastes like nothing on earth but water, which leads you to taking too much. Hoping you will print these honest words for the benefit of all concerned, I am, most respectably, JANE E. TUBBS. Yours to command
